TRIES TO ESCAPE HANGING.

ARCHIE KINSAULS CUTS HIS THROAT.

Condemned to be Hung at Noon Today in a Desperate Effort to Prevent it a Prisoner Attempts His Own Life—E. W. Pou Nominated for Congress in the Fourth.

Special Dispatch to the Telegram.

Raleigh, Sept. 7—Archie Kinsauls, who was to be hanged at Clinton at noon today, cut his throat this morning, seriously, and physicians think fatally. The Sheriff of Sampson county wired Governor Russell to know what he should do as to the execution. The Governor directs him to postpone it until next Friday. Kinsauls is a desperate man. He has made up his mind not to be hanged, but if he lives, he will be next Friday.

Yesterday's Democratic Congressional Convention here was certainly a lively one. It was a fine body of men, but at times it went wild. There were six candidates for the nomination—Congressman Atwater, W. B. Shaw, F. S. Spurill, Ed. Chambers Smith, W. C. Hammer and E. W. Pou. The latter was not brought out until after the 5th ballot, and then an effort was made to stampede the convention with him, but it failed. Finallly, on the 108 ballot he received 153 votes and was practically nominated.

MR. BRYANT ON OUR FAIR.

He Writes The Charlotte Observer of the Elaborate Preparations Being Made—Some of the Local Horses That Will be Entered for the Races.

While in Greensboro yesterday, Mr. H. E. C. Bryant, of The Charlotte Observer, visited the Central Carolina Fair grounds and inspected some of the fast horses owned by Greensboro gentlemen. He writes his paper as follows:

"The people of Greensboro are in earnest about their fair which will be held from the 9th to the 12th of next month. Elaborate preparations are being made No money or effort will be spared to make the show a success.

"Through the kindness of Dr. J. T. J. Battle, I was enabled to see some of the blooded horses, owned by local men, that will be entered for the races. I saw a bay colt, the property of Dr. J. A. Williams, of Reidsville, that will be entered as a green horse. He is undergoing systematic training now under Mr. James H. Ewalt, of Paris, Ky., who is here for the purpose of handling horses for the fair. The Williams colt is a good individual and is developing considerable speed.

"Bessie a fine mare out of Simmons, a fine Kentucky horse, is speedy. She belongs to Mr. C. P. Vanstory and will be trotted in the races if she can be put in condition in time.

"Mattie Holt, out of Baronville, bred and raised by Mr. L. Banks Holt, of Graham, is a beautiful young mare owned by Messrs. Garland Daniel and Ernest Holt. She was driven in several races last year and was never behind the money, though she was not driven for a record. At the fair here she will be raced for the money. She is showing good speed and the horse that beats her will have to go in the teens.

"Bill Arp is a fine bay stallion owned by Dr. J. T. J. Battle. In the races here last year, during gala week, he made a pacing record of 2:32. He is in good form now and will do much better this year.

"Perfection, possibly the best horse in the county, is out of Blue Hair, a fine Kentucky animal, and belongs to Dr. Battle. In training he is develop-

COAL STRIKE MONDAY MORNING.

Some of the Men Are Reluctant to Quit Work, But the District Officers Are Doing All in Their Power to Urge Them Out—Wilkesbarre District Solid to Quit.

By Wire to The Telegram.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 7.—The commissioners of the miners of this district met last night in secret session and this morning reported that all the men in all the colliers in this valley are ready to obey an order to strike. The reports from the Lackawanna region are that the men there have the same feeling. In the Hazelton region the men are backward about quitting work, and district presidents Mitchell and Duffy are doing all they can to get the men in line. The men know the strike order is coming Saturday night and will go into effect on Monday.

MANCHESTER'S COTTON FIGHT.

A Resolution Passed Saying That Cotton Has Not Been so Scarce Since the Civil War.

By Wire to The Telegram.

London, Sept. 7—Throughout Lancashire the greatest interest is manifested in today's meeting of the cotton spinners at Manchester, which was arranged by the federation of the cotton spinners of Manchester.

Owing to the scarcity of American cotton the opinion prevails on the Manchester exchange that a resolution declaring that cotton has not been so scarce since the civil war in America will be adopted. Since the call for the meeting was sent out on Sept. 4, there has been a great rush to purchase stock.

London, Sept. 7—Advices from Pooting Fu give details of the massacre of missionaries. Mrs. Simcox, wife of Frank Simcox, of Oil City, was stabbed to death while standing with gun in hand over the dead body of her husband. Before death closed her eyes she saw her three babes impaled on Chinese bayonets. Dr. and Mrs. Hodge, of Phllidelphia were also murdered.

HAPPY SCHOOL CHILDREN.

The Opening of the City Public Schools Today—An Enrollment of Over One Thousand.

This morning hundreds of children in Greensboro turned their faces toward the school room to resume studies left off three months ago. It is gratifying to know that never before have the Greensboro Graded Schools opened more auspiciously. Although this was the first day of the fall term, and no work further than organization and classification was attempted, the enrollment was 1,093. Many will enter next week.

The enrollment in the various schools was as follows: School No. 1, Lindsay street, white, 458; School No. 2, Asheboro street, white, 261; School No. 1, colored, 234; School No. 2, colored, 140. The total white enrollment is 719; colored, 374.

All the teachers were at their places and the work started off as smoothly as if the schools had been running for a month. Superintendent Grimsley is highly gratified. He says he has never seen brighter prospects for a successful year's work.

It is earnestly hoped that all who intend to enter the schools for the fall term will do so Monday, if possible. This will be greatly to the advantage of all concerned, especially the pupils.

GEN. J. S. CARR ON THE FAIR.

CAN BE MADE BEST IN THE STATE

The Advantages of Greensboro Are Unsurpassed and the Opportunity is Ours, If We Will But Avail Ourselves of It—Nothing So Advertises a Community as a Good Fair—More Money Needed to Make Our Fair a Success—A Soliciting Committee to Wait on the Business Men.

The mass meeting in the court house last night, in the interest of the Central Carolina Fair, was fairly well attended, though a great many of the prominent business men of the city were conspicuous by their absence. It is believed, however, that the interest of these men in the success of the Fair is greater than might have been supposed by a visitor at last night's meeting.

The meeting was called to order by Mr. J. Van Lindley, president of the Central Carolina Fair Association. Mr. R. R. King was made permanent chairman, with the representatives of the press as secretaries.

The speaker of the occasion, Gen. Julian S. Carr, was introduced by Mayor Taylor, who spoke briefly of the great advance made by Greens boro and Guilford county along industrial lines during the past few years. The influx of outside capital and the internal improvements were cited as indications of our permanent prosperity. It was but natural, he said, that we should inaugurate a fair to better advertise our resources and industries to the outside world. He predicted that the Central Carolina Fair would meet with greater success than any previous like effort in North Carolina, saying the liberality and public spirit of the people of this city and county would make it such.

Gen. Carr was warmly applauded and expressed his gratification for the cordial reception given him. He was glad to be here, he said, because it gave him an opportunity to meet and talk with the good people of Greensboro, and because he was always glad to be associated with any movement that promised great results.

GEN. JULIAN S CARR.
A Vice-President of the Central Carolina Fair Association

He spoke extensively of the benefits of a properly managed fair, saying they were countless and far-reaching. He has been interested in and connected with fairs and expositions for 20 years and has studied their influences and results. The superior advantages of Greensboro as a location for a fair were pointed out and enumerated. The rich farming lands of Guilford county, the splendid fruit production, the mines and industrial enterprises, the manufacturing establishments and other great business institutions, together with unsurpassed railroad facilities, all tend to make Greensboro and Guilford county the garden spot of North Carolina.

Continuing, Gen. Carr said there was one thing needful—more extensive and persistent advertising of our advantages and the opportunities here awaiting investors. These things must be shown to the outside world, and this can only be done by the co-operation of the people. As illustrating the advantages to be accrued from this class of advertising, the speaker referred to the Philadelphia Exposition, the Wold's Fair in Chicago and several other fairs and expositions. He spoke particularly of the great good resulting from the State Fair in Raleigh and the difficulties the originators and stock holders of the North Carolina Agricultural Society had to overcome.

CAPT. J. H. WALSH,
Secretary Central Carolina Fair Association

In closing his speech Gen. Carr said that Greenboro has more advantages for the successful conduct of a fair than any other town or city in North Carolina. "The opportunity is yours," he said, "and you can establish the most celebrated fair in the State if you will."

When Gen. Carr had concluded Mr. R. R. King made a few remarks, speaking briefly of the organization of the Central Carolina Fair Association. Stock to the amount of $7,000, he said, had been subscribed, with which a site had been purchased, one of the best half-mile race tracts in the South built, and other improvements made. At least $5,000 more will be required to accomplish the purpose in view, and Mr. King appealed to the business men of Greensboro to subscribe the required amount.

FRED N. TAYLOR,
Assistant Secretary of the Central Carolina Fair Association

Secretary J. H. Walsh made a short speech, saying he was confident the people of Greensboro would not allow the Fair to suffer for the want of $5,000; that they could not afford to stand by and see the enterprise die.

Mr. Ceasar Cone, one of the vice-presidents of the Fair Association, arose and said he would increase his stock subscription from $100 to $300.

As the best means of raising the required amount of stock, it was decided to appoint a soliciting committee to make a thorough canvass of the business men of the city.

After a rising vote of thanks had been tendered Gen. Carr for his excellent address, the meeting adjoured.

BEFORE THE STANDING MASTER.

TAX ASSESSMENT CASE NEXT WEEK.

Hearing to be Held in Greensboro Before Judge Shepherd, Commencing Tuesday. To Determine Whether the Corporation Commission Has the Authority to Assess Railway Property at its Full Value—The Southern Contends That it Pays on as High a Rate as the Average Assessment of Other Property.

The hearing of a big lawsuit will be begun in Greensboro next Tuesday. The North Carolina Corporation Commission will be the plaintiff and the Southern Railway will be the defendant. The hearing will be before ex-Chief Justice James E. Shepherd, standing master in chancery, and will attract a great deal of interest. It is for the purpose of determining whether the Corporation Commission has the authority to say at what rate railroad property shall be assessed for taxation.

It will be remembered that, shortly after the creation of the Railroad Commission, the members of the body attempted to force the railroads of North Carolina to pay taxes on the full valuation of their property. The three great railway systems of the State—the Southern, the Seaboard Air Line and the Atlantic Coast Line—excepted to this ruling, saying it was an unjust discrimination. The Corporation Commission then took legal proceedings to force the payment of taxes at the increased rate. Suit was brought in the State courts, then removed to the United States District Court, Judge Simonton finally appointing ex-Chief Justice Shepherd standing master in chancery to take evidence relating to the subject.

Judge Shepherd has held hearings in Wilmington, Charlotte and Asheville, and will begin the fourth in Greensboro next Tuesday. Mr. S. L. Trogdon, clerk of the Circuit and District Courts at this place, today issued subpoenas for 24 witnesses in Guilford, Rockingham and Caswell counties.

It is not denied by the Southern Railway Company that its property is not assessed at its full valuation, the contention being that the assessment is as high as the average assessment of other property. It is for the purpose of proving this contention that the 24 witnesses in Guilford, Rockingham and Caswell counties have been summoned on the part of the defendant railway company. These witnesses are prominent business men and large property owners, and hence are supposed to know something of taxation, rates of assessment, etc.

WHY THE WATER IS MUDDY.

If Consumers Would Economize it Would Become Clear—Guards to be Put Out.

Gen. J. D. Glenn, manager of the Greensboro Water Supply Company, tells The Telegram that the city water is kept muddy by continual pumping at the station, this being made necessary by the amount of water wasted on lawns and in other ways. He says that if the people would be economical in the use of water for a few days it would become clear.

It is strictly against the rules of the company for consumers to allow water to run on their lawns during the night or to waste it in any other way. It is especially desired that water be not wasted during the present dry weather while the supply is becoming scarcer every day. The company will station guards in various portions of the city during the night, and whenever water is being wasted the supply will be cut off.

BUXTON IN THE EIGHTH.

Nominated Last Night at 11:30 on the 49th Ballot—Pearson for Elector.

J. C. Buxton, Esq., of Forsyth, was nominated on the forty-ninth ballot at 11:30 last night in the congressional convention in session at Lenoir yesterday afternoon. The proceedings of the convention were most harmonious throughout' says the special to the Carlotte Observer, and Mr. Buxton's speech of acceptance was wildly cheered. The speeches of the defeated candidates were without exception most excellent and the convention adjourned at midnight in fine spirits and good shape for doing effective campaign work.

Col. W. S. Pearson, of Burke, was chosen elector for the eighth district.

THE CRIME OF A WHITE BRUTE.

REVOLTING DEED AT WALNUT COVE

James Rierson, Son of the Mayor of Walnut Cove Assaults a Three-Year-Old Child—Shut the Innocent in His Mother's Kitchen and Then Worked His Devilish Purpose.

Special to the Winston Sentinel.

Walnut Cove, N. C. Sept. 6—This town is greatly stirred up over a revolting crime committed here Tuesday evening on the three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Boyles, by James Rierson, aged seventeen years, son of Mayor Sanders Rierson.

It appears that Mrs. Boyles went to the home of a neighbor that evening, leaving her two children—the little girl referred to above, and a six-year old boy—at the Rierson home just across the street.

Upon returning home, the mother heard the little daughter crying, and went over to Mrs. Rierson's to see what was the trouble. She found that the boy, Jim Rierson, had locked the girl up in his mother's kitchen and there committed a nameless crime upon her. As Mrs. Boyles went in the boy ran out. The little girl told her mother that Jim promised to give her an apple if she would not cry. The girl's brother said he heard his sister crying and tried to get in the kitchen, but the door was locked. Rierson made his escape, but several officers have been out looking for him. Telephone messages have been sent in various directions.

Drs. Jones and Fulp, who are attending the little girl, report her condition serious. The mother, it is feared, will lose her mind over the sad affair.

On Sunday night Jim Rierson got on a horse and ran a negro boy in the woods. The little fellow fell and the horse ran over him, inflicting serious injuries.

TO FREE MRS. MAYBRICK.

Famous Prisoner to be Liberated Within Two Years.

London Dispatch, 3d.

But two years more of prison life remain before Mrs. Florence Maybrick, although her sentence, when she was condemned for poisoning her husband, was for life imprisonment. The reason for this is that a life sentence for a woman in England really means fifteen years, and as the prisoner's conduct has been exemplary she has obtained commutation to an extent which will have the effect of restoring her to her friends in a couple of years.

Despite the fact that she has aged greatly in prison, has become gray-haired and lost much of the beauty which once rendered her so fascinating, yet there is no reason for apprehending that she will not survive until the hour sounds for her liberation.

Throughout the past week efforts have been made to obtain official confirmation of a circumstantial story to the effect that the Secretary of State for the Home Department has had for a long time in his possession a duly signed confession by Mrs. Maybrick of the fact that she had poisoned her husband. There is not a judge nor a lawyer in England who does not know and believe that Mrs. Maybrick was unfairly tried and unfairly convicted, and had it not been for her alleged confession, which she is asserted to have signed within the first few months of her imprisonment, it is probable that she would have been quietly pardoned.

The Verdict.

Atlanta Constitution.

A corner's jury in Georgia delivered the following original verdict on the sudden death of a merchant who had failed in business:

"We, the jury, find from the doctor's statement that the deceased came to his death from heart failure, superinduced by business failure, which was caused by speculation failure, which was the result of failure to see fur enough ahead."

Birds Take Baths In Ashes.

Naturalists tell us that in making their toilets some birds use water only, some water and dust, while others prefer dust and no water. Birds are not only nice in the choice of bath water, but also very particular about the quality of their toilet dust.

Wild ducks, though feeding by salt water, prefer to bathe in fresh water pools and will fly long distances inland to running brooks and ponds, where they preen and dress their feathers in the early hours of the morning. Sparrows bathe often, both in water and in dust. They are not so particular about the quality of water as about the quality of the dust. The city sparrow must take a water bath where he can get it. Road dust, the driest and finest possible, suits him best. Partridges prefer dry loam. They like to scratch out the soil from under the grass and fill their feathers with cool earth.

Most birds are fond of ashes. Take a walk some early morning across a field where bonfires have burned and see the numbers of winged creatures that rise suddenly from the ash heaps. A darting form, a small cloud of ashes, and the bathers disappear.

A Tree of Many Uses.

The carnahuba palm is one of the most valuable trees in Brazil. From its roots is extracted a medicine. Its stems afford strong, light fibers which acquire a beautiful luster and serve also for joists, rafters and other building materials as well as for stakes for fences. From part of the tree wines and vinegar are made. It yields a kind of sugar as well as a starch resembling sago.

Large sun spots, astronomers say, caused the extreme heat this summer, and doctors declare nearly all the prostrations were induced by disorders of the stomach. Good health follows good digestion. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure digests what you eat. If you have indigestion or dyspepsia it will quickly relieve and permanently cure you. Howard Gardner.

HIGH POINT ELECTION.

That Town Will Try for Water Works on October 9—Other Matters.

Correspondence of The Telegram.

High Point, Sept 7—Mrs. R. A. Wheeler spent yesterday in Raleigh.

Mrs. S. A. Penn went down to Greensboro yesterday morning.

J. Elwood Cox spent yesterday in Greensboro.

Postmaster Bryan, of Durham, paid Assistant Postmaster Eshelman, of this place, a call yesterday.

Miss Lizzie Bourne, of Louisville, Ky., who has been living with her sister, Mrs. H. C. Field, for the past twelve months, has just returned from an extended visit in Georgia and Alabama.

Our citizens would like very much to have the unsightly rubbish of brick and mortar, remains of the late fire, removed from the sidewalks on Main and Washington streets. This is a matter that should be attended to at once.

Refering to the editorial which appeared in these columns a few days ago concerning the practical talent of Guilford county; we wish to endorse what has been said, and add that we think High Point could help the county a little in that line. Our readers may hear from us later.

Yesterday belonged to the colored people in High Point. The Grand United Order of Odd Fellows are holding their State council here, and yesterday was there their gala day. In the afternoon they paraded the town in a most pompus manner.

The colored excursion which was expected to come here from Charlotte yesterday did not put in its appearance.

The Graded School begins Monday. All the pupils seem anxious to get back in school. It is expected that the attendance this year will exceed all previous years.

The citizens of High Point should not forget that another election, as to whether we shall have water works here, will be held October 9. Let every citizen do his part, and we won't be left behind this time. We must have water works.

JOKED OVER HIS SUICIDE.

"At the End of This Wire You Will Find a Man," He Wrote.

Chicago Dispatch, 2d.

Jacob Kobler was a practical joker during his life and when he decided to end his life last night he did so in a way which fully sustained his reputation. Kobler went to the lake front early in the evening and at the foot of Adams street drove a stake into the ground. Then he took thirty feet of wire and stretching it out tied one end to the stake and with the other he made a loop and passed around his body at the armpits. After completing these preparations Kobler placed his broad-brimmed felt hat on top of the stake and in the hat band stuck a sheet of paper, on which was written: "At the end of this wire you will find a man."

Kobler waded as far out into the lake as the length of the wire would permit and drowned himself. At midnight James Murray, a night watchman employed at the dumping grounds and living at No. 104 Eleventh street, saw the stake and hat. He investigated and found the note and notified the police. Policemen Lehhey and Richards were sent to the lake front and when they saw the wire and read the note they said: "It's a joke some one is trying to play on us. There is probably a log at the other end of the wire."

When they caught hold of the wire and drew it in they were surprised to see that it was attached to the body of a man. A letter disclosed his identity. Kobler lived at 818 West Twenty-first street and was 60 years old. He left home on last Monday, leaving a note saying he was going to commit suicide.

COLD STEEL OR DEATH.

"There is but one small chance to save your life and that is through an operation," was the awful prospect set before Mrs. I. B. Hunt, of Lime Ridge, Wis., by her doctor after vainly trying to cure her of a frightful case of stomach trouble and yellow jauntice. He didn't count on the marvellous power of Electric Bitters to cure stomach and liver troubles, but she heard of it, took seven bottles, was wholly cured, avoided surgeon's knife, now weighs more and feels better than ever. It's positively guaranteed to cure stomach, liver and kidney troubles and never disappoints. Price 50c at C. E. Holton's drug store.

REMORSE.

One day I trod upon a heart—
Set heel upon it where it lay.
My shoe was purple, and my art
Could wash the stain away.

It shed a perfume like a rose
Crushed between breasts of lovers pale,
Or like the bruised wistaria does
Beneath a summer hail.

I washed my shoe within a brook
And dried it on the burnished grass;
The water laughed up at my look,
But the bent sky was brass!

I passed again along the way
When the rich, fallow evening swooned.
I saw the same heart where it lay;
It never showed a wound!

But as I walked my nostrils filled
Full of that rose scent, overfair,
Like a fine Persian attar spilled
Far faint on the heavy air.

I flung away the purple shoe
And naked footed took the sod,
But every footprint, well I knew,
Smelt guiltily to God.

A PAIR OF BALLET SHOES

A Story of the Stage.

"Really I'm the dullest of men," said Edgar Brooke, with the smile of long suffering, to a youthful interviewer who was trying to pick up a few more crumbs of interest at the end of his long talk with the most inimitable comedian of the day. Edgar Brooke glanced abstractedly round his study and racked his brains for a suitable anecdote, but he couldn't for the life of him remember at the minute any of the antiquated theatrical stories that every actor makes his own.

The youthful interviewer's eyes wandered curiously around and fell on a quaint little pair of shoes which were hanging over the oak fireplace—not dainty slippers, spangled and gay, but just a limp memento of the ballet, with rounded toes, no heels and an old covering of silk, worn and frayed. They hung against the wall, with the little toes turned in, as if their dancing days were over and they were far too weary for a pirouette or even the first position.

"A curious souvenir, Mr. Brooke."

Edgar Brooke smiled, and there was silence for a minute.

The comedian had forgotten the youthful interviewer. He seemed to see the little shoes dancing on the wall. His comfortable room faded out of sight. There was the sound of scraping fiddles and the flare of gas. Twenty years had slipped away in hardly as many seconds.

* * * * * * *

It was behind the scenes of a country theater. The close air of a little room almost stifled Edgar Brooke. He dressed with the Pantaloon, two acrobats and the Demon King of the pantomime.

Their clothes were heaped on a basket in one corner. The Pantaloon was "making up," and the Demon King was drinking whisky and soda and reading scraps from The Sporting Times to amuse the two acrobats.

Edgar Brooke, hungry eyed, lean and haggard, sat with his aching head between his hands. His tinseled harlequin suit was loose for his wasted body. Months of illness, hard luck and poverty had taken the heart and soul out of him.

He gave a sigh of thankfulness when his noisy comrades were summoned to the stage and he was alone.

"Heard that Brooke has got the sack?" said the Pantaloon.

"Yes, poor devil!" answered the Demon King.

Then there was the quick patter of feet on the stairs, the door was pushed a little open, and a Columbine, in gauze and a smile, peeped into Brooke's dressing room. Although she was only 16, they had been solemnly engaged for two months.

"Eddy, darling!" she exclaimed, running into the room and perching herself on the Pantaloon's basket. The young man looked up, too wretched to hide the marks of tears on his face or to try to control his unsteady lips.

"It's all up, Kitty," he replied. "I've got my notice, dear. Run down stairs—you shouldn't come up. One day they'll catch you."

"My own love," said the Columbine, jumping off the basket and kneeling down beside him, "you don't know yourself—none of these fools know you. You're worth more than the whole lot!"

"Oh, Kitty, Kitty! I can't bear it!"

Broken by weakness and despair, he drew Kitty's slender arms around his neck and, resting his head on her shoulder, sobbed aloud.

"You must cheer up, Eddy!" she whispered.

She persuaded him to stand up, hunted for his small mask and stiff wand, shook herself together and gave a touch to her own complexion before the glass.

Edgar Brooke went down to the stage with his hand on her shoulder.

The manager of the company was standing with his back to the curtain.

"'Urry up there!" said he. "Have you got that side braced? My boy, your shop's wabbling. Lights! 'Ang it all! Lights! Knock 'im off! Ring up! Now, my dear"—

Up went the curtain and on went the Columbine with a flying bound and a beaming smile. Edgar Brooke leaned against the wall for a second with his clinched hand to his throbbing brow. Then he, too, ran into the glare of the stage.

He could see nothing but an endless row of horizontal, blurred lights that were dancing between him and the audience; the house seemed to be full of fog. Columbine tripped toward him, she took his hand, and they twisted and turned together.

The harlequinade was short and bustling, and at the finish the Harlequin had to take the usual flying leap through a window.

Brooke and his sweetheart again made their entrance hand in hand.

"Stand still, Eddy!" she whispered, and then danced around him with a hundred little tricky steps and beckoning gestures.

The cue came. Harlequin struck the ground with his wand and leaped. It was a last effort. Luck and training guided him to the right spot. He shot through the window as cleanly as an arrow and was caught by the men who were waiting to receive him. He rose to his feet, still clinging to their arms, staggered a minute and then fell fainting to the ground.

"Plucky little chap!" said one of the men.

"Not an ounce of flesh on his bones!" said the other.

When Edgar Brooke came to himself, he was lying on a bench hastily dragged on to the stage. He saw that the gas jets in the flies were turned off. The curtain was raised, for the noisy audience had poured into the streets. His bench was near to the footlights, but they, too, were lowered, and it was an anxious, whispering group of people on every side that gradually crept into his consciousness.

There was the manager stooping over him, with a hand on his breast and a big finger pressed to his pulse. Beside him was the clown. Most of the girls were still in their costumes, with their hair falling untidily on their shoulders. The whole scene was shadowy and strange to the pale, exhausted Harlequin as he sank back again on the arm of the Demon King.

He closed his eyes, but suddenly the ringing voice of his Columbine seemed to leap out of the babel of tongues.

At first he could not follow what she said. He only saw how erect was the little figure, at once pathetic and eloquent of love and the fierce earnestness of youth.

Slowly her words took shape, disconnected and broken as the sentences were.

"In a couple of months this old panto will be over!" she said. "We shall all go east and west—the Lord knows where? But look here—we've been good friends, haven't we—jolly, good friends? You fellows have been kind to me, all of you. But there's one of you that I love—there! I love him! Why? Because he's fought against trouble and poverty and illness, because his heart has never failed him till tonight. I'll tell you something else."

There was such intensity in her voice and face that she held them silent and absorbed for a few minutes more.

"It's just this: Edgar Brooke has no soul on earth to turn to! I tell you he's danced in a booth; he's sung in the streets; he's worked; he's starved; he's looked at life under the canvas; he's thought of death under the skies. That's the stuff for an actor to be made of."

Edgar Brooke put out his hand to stop her, but she went on, with flashing eyes.

"Well, what do you say? Shall it be a round robin for the sake of our own hard times? Come! We all know where the shoe pinches."

She bent down and pulled off one of her own shoes and held it out to the manager first of all. He might have resisted the disconnected little speech, but not the pretty face turned up so appealingly to his—a couple of coins clinked into the shoe.

Edgar felt his cheeks burn, for the theater was his little world, and the quick response of his comrades touched and amazed him.

His wistful eyes followed Columbine as she tripped from one to another, now with a jest or smile, now with a tear.

When she brought the little shoe to the side of the bench at last, he could only stretch out his hands to the crowd that pressed round. He tried to thank them, looked up to the Columbine with a few broken words and turned his face away.

The ring of encouraging voices, the flicker of uncertain lights, the touch of the girl's fingers twined round his hand faded into misty shadow of sound and sight, and were gone as swiftly as they came.

"A curious memento, Mr. Brooke?" said the youthful interviewer again, recalling the popular comedian to the faded ballet shoes.

"Yes, yes," said Edgar Brooke lightly. "But it would scarcely interest you. By the way, did I tell you that my wife was a dancer—before we married—a long time ago?"—Mainly About People.

The State crop pest commission met yesterday and heard the report of Gerald McCarthy, the State entomologist. This was to the effect that there is yet San Jose Scale in some nurseries; that J. Van Lindly two years ago destroyed 60,000 infested trees near Southern Pines for the same reason.

The Head of the House has many responsibilities resting upon him, and among those of a serious character is the health of the family. WINE OF CARDUI

WOMEN WHO WORK.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 12.

Though only 19 years old, I suffered from pains and female troubles two years. Last spring I got so bad I had to quit work. I had to support myself, and could not afford a high-priced doctor. I got one bottle of Wine of Cardui and that made me feel better. Have now used several bottles and am well. My mother used the Wine for Change of Life and was greatly relieved.

MISS MARGARET WALSH.

McELREE'S Wine of Cardui

Many girls and women find it necessary to earn their own living in various kinds of employment. Their work is often so hard and confining that the health breaks down. Their delicate constitutions are unfitted for tiresome tasks. Weakness nearly always makes its appearance in the peculiarly delicate womanly organs. Constant standing on the feet, and coming and going at the beck of a superintendent or foreman, induces falling of the womb, leucorrhœa, headache and backache. The pay of women workers is often so notoriously small that when sickness comes they have no money to engage skillful physicians. To them Wine of Cardui is truly a blessing. It cures them of their ills at a small cost, and they can act as their own physicians. No doctor can do as much for "female troubles" as Wine of Cardui.

"HAMILTONIANISM."

Does Speaker Henderson mean that the text word of this hour must be the excellence of monarchial government? When he declares * * * * tries to live up to the doctrines of Hamilton did he include Hamilton's hatred of a republican government and his attachment to a monarchy?—Norfolk Virginian-Pilot.

For some time our contemporary has been industriously expounding the doctrines of "Hamilton," presumably Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, Washington's successor as commander of the army, and the man to whom this country owes a debt of gratitude that should prevent his actions being subjected to misrepresentation after he has been dead near a century, and killed, too, in a quarrel growing out of his efforts in behalf of Thomas Jefferson, whom papers like the Virginian-Pilot today deify and we all love. Our Virginia contemporary, along with one of our North Carolina ones, has clearly taken its knowledge of Hamilton's doctrines second hand, with due amount of octopus-inspired fancy.

Mr. Hamilton's "doctrines" were put largely into the Constitution and we have since been living under them. His position was simply that large powers should be intrusted to the Federal government, as against the arbitrary and independent action of the separate states. He was no more a monarchist than Washington, and his co-labor with Madison in urging the reluctant states to accept the Constitution did more than anything else to complete the Federal contract. In the confederation preceeding the union the weakness of the central government wa a matter of ridicule, and Hamilton foresaw what many of his colleagues were blind to, that a union with no power of acting except such as was arbitrarily given by jealous States would be no union at all, as the confederation had practically been none. His words show that he understood the situation exactly. He saw that "in the commencement of a revolution which received its birth from usurpations of tyranny," nothing was more natural than that the people should go to the other extreme, and in fear of the possible usurpations of a central government, by its limitations, make that government so weak as to be useless. In seeing this, he also saw that the rights of the States should be protected in their proper jurisdiction. On this point he says:

With regard to the jurisdiction of the two governments, I shall certainly admit that the Constitution ought to be so formed as not to prevent the States from providing for their own existence; and I maintain that it is so formed; and that their power of providing for themselves is sufficiently established.

In his speech of June 28, 1788, urging the State of New York to adopt the Federal constitution, he said:

I wish the committee to remember that the Constitution under examination is framed upon truly republican principles; and that, as it is expressly designed to provide for the common protection and the general welfare of the United States, it must be utterly repugnant to this Constitution to subvert the State governments or oppress the people.

In the opening of the same speech Mr. Hamilton made the same statement that we are making for him today, namely that he favored a republican form of government, and before the Virginian-Pilot charges so true a patriot with being a monarchist, it it should carefully examine his own words to see wnat he really did believe. Mr. Hamilton said:

We all, in equal sincerity, profess to be anxious for the establishment of a republican government, on a safe and solid basis. It is the object of the wishes of every honest man in the United States, and I presume that I shall not be disbelieved, when I declare, that it is an object of all others, the nearest and most dear to my own heart. The means of accomplising this great purpose becomes the most important study which can interest mankind. It is our duty to examine all those means with peculiar attention, and to choose the best and most effectual.

Mr. Hamilton's actual experience had taught him that such a confederacy as some of his colleagues wanted was worthless, he therefore wanted a stronger one. His knowledge of history and human nature taught him that a turbulent and factious assembly could not administer a stable government, he therefore wanted a senate as a balance wheel. His reasoning faculties showed him that a general government could not exist unless local interests were sacrificed to the general good, he therefore wished the federal government, instead of the various states, to have supreme authority in certain things. All of these objects were accomplished in the constitution, and all of them have been strengthened and enlarged since Mr. Hamilton wrote his incomparable papers urging the jealous states to accept the instrument. And yet, Alexander Hamilton is now being tried as a monarchist. It is no wonder that excited individuals see so many monarchists in the air today.

Gen. Carr certainly told Greensboro some good things last night, and some which we all need to put in our pipes and smoke. We need to demonstrate to the outside that we believe in ourselves. There is no better way to do this than to put up our money on an undertaking which we know must facilitate to the greatest extent our growth and advancement. We commend to our business people the words of General Carr and the example of Mr. Cesar Cone.

We thank the brethren of the State press for the kind things they are saying about our fair, and in behalf of the management we hereby extend them a hearty invitation to be with us and occupy a front seat.

The Splendid Opening of Guilford College.

Prof. T. Gilbert Pearson, who spent the day in the city, says Guilford College has had an exceptionally fine opening. A great many of the old students have returned, with a gratifying number of new ones. Both of the boys' dormitories are already full.

During the vacation considerable improvements have been made on the buildings and grounds. The halls of the three literary societies have been refitted and newly furnished.

The friends of this worthy institution hope for it the best year in its entire history.

Dry in Stanly.

Mr. J. W. Merritt returned this morning from Albemarle, Stanly county. He says the drought in that section of the State is dreadful. Many of the wells in Albemarle have gone dry and some of the inhabitants have to get their water from wells more than a block away. The cotton manufacturers there have had artesian wells bored to obviate the necessity of closing their mills for lack of water.

Changes in Insurance Circles.

Mr. James M. Young, well known in Greensboro, has resigned as special agent of the Southeastern Tariff Association to accept a position with the Georgia Home Insurance Company. He will travel North and South Carolina, Virginia and Maryland. His successor with the Southeastern Tariff Association is Mr. Robert Toombs Caldwell.

Mr. J. Marvin Carr, of the insurance firm of O. W. Carr & Co., will leave Monday for Waynesville, where he will spend some time. It is probable that he will engage in the insurance business at that place.

is where we stand in the lumber business. At the kicking post, as it were, in regard to prices.

First comes the owner of the timber. He just woke up to the value of it and wants double last year's prices. Then the sawmill man. He has not been making a fortune and thinks now he should share a little in the general prosperity

They say to us: "We must have so much for our trees and work." After a while it is "up to you." Don't kick. You don't suppose we have nerve enough to put up prices unless they had first been put up on us. No, indeed. But prices are NOT high. They have been to low and are just now getting reasonable. BIG BETS ASCRIBED TO CROKER.

There's Money in the Game Whichever Way the Election Goes.

New York Sun.

There was a great deal of talk in the Murphy Democratic headquarters yesterday about election bets. Mr. Croker refused to say anything about a report that it was his $20,000 which Bell & Co. bet on Friday on Bryan against $50,000, put up by Louis Wormser, who took the McKinley end, or about a further report that he has $50,000 up on Bryan at similar odds. Mr. Murphy said that he did not know definitely whether Mr. Croker had made the $20,000 bet or not, but that he though it quite probable, because Mr. Croker frequently backed his political judgment with cash.

Mr. Murphy said that he expected to see the betting even within a short time. It was pointed out yesterday that if bets were made at 2½ to 1, now the person who took the Bryan end could bet on McKinley when the odds reached 1½ to 1 or even if the betting came to that, and make money whichever way the election went. In national campaigns the odds fluctuate a great deal toward the close of the campaign they become more nearly even than they are in the beginning.

A Big Broad Paper Bound to Have Big Broad Readers.

Charity and Children.

People ought not to flare up when an editor publishes something they do not believe. A very intelligent gentleman told us not long ago that the New York Sun is a rabid and hateful paper, but he had been a constant reader and admirer of it. Its spoke its mind without fear or favor and this man stood by it for that reason. Most folks would order it never to darken their doors again, for that very thing. Sometimes an editor has a better point of view than his readers, and they should at least be sure of their ground before they punish him. We heard of an irate father once who took his son out of school because the teacher insisted that he must spell "tater" with a p. And then, dear brother, granting that you are right and the editor wrong, you should have patience with a man who is sometimes compelled to dash off matter with the foreman standing at the door yelling for "copy." Do you think you would always say the right and proper thing under such circumstances? Never forget that no editor tries to offend, unless he is a fool. He is your friend, not your enemy. He may be wrong but he is generally honest; and you can afford to put up with a good deal from an honest man.

A big, broad paper is bound to have big, broad readers.

Economy.

From the Chicago Post.

"I don't see why you have to have such expensive silk stockings," he growled.

"Purely as a matter of economy," she replied, sweetly.

"Economy! Where does the economy come in?"

"Why, you dear, blind old fellow!" she exclaimed. "Haven't you ever noticed that with low shoes and beautiful silk stockings a woman's skirts never drag in the dust and mud?"

The Discovery of Science.

Carthage Tribune,

Great is science! The Department of Agriculture, in a report on "Mosquitoes of the U. S.," says the malarial mosquitoes stand on their head when resting. The average person who finds a mosquito resting, whether standing on his head or feet, would have killed him without this valuable official information.

TO FAME.

Bright fairy of the morn with flowers arrayed,
Whose beauties to thy young pursuer seem
Beyond the ecstasy of poet's dream,
Shall I o'ertake thee ere thy luster fade?

Ripe glory of the morn from heaven displayed,
A pageant of delight and power and gold
Developing into mirage manifold,
Do I o'ertake thee, or am I betrayed?

Dull shadows of the evening, gaunt and gray,
At random thrown beyond me or above
And cold as memory in the arms of love,
Have I o'ertaken thee but to cast away?

No morn or noon or eve am I, she said,
But night, the depth of night behind the sun
By all mankind pursued, but never won
Until my shadow falls upon a shade.

—R. D. Blackmore.

For hot weather a drink that is particularly healthful and pleasant, especially to invalids and children, is made of oatmeal. Put into a large earthen bowl or jar one-quarter of a cupful of oatmeal, one-half of a cupful of granulated sugar and one-half of a lemon cut into small pieces. Pour over the mixture a gallon of boiling water and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Let it stand until it is cold. Fruit vinegars may be used to flavor this in place of the lemon.

A Memory Of the Code.

How an ex-Confederate and a Brilliant Young Lawyer Fought a Duel In Richmond Shortly After the Civil War.

Died.—At his home in Richmond, Va., May 25, 1900, Captain Page McCarthy, aged 67 years.

General Robert E. Lee had surrendered. The Confederacy had fallen. Thousands of young southrons had come from the war to find their homes in ruins and their fortunes lost. Nothing but the land remained, and many of them settled down when the first shock of defeat was still fresh to plant cotton and tobacco. Proud young men, the product of the chivalry of the old south, who had never done a stroke of work, they lived for a time the life of field hands. They got up with the sun, hitched the only remaining mule to the rusty plow and worked hard in the fields all day. In the intensity of the labor they were able to forget the bitterness of their lot.

Meanwhile Richmond, the old capital of the "lost cause," became more than ever the social center of the south. Outside of New Orleans Richmond was the largest of southern cities. To it had gone most of the few old planters who had managed to save a part at least of their fortunes. Naturally the more ambitious and enterprising of the younger generation gravitated in the same direction.

Two years after Lee issued that last sad farewell to the remnant of his shattered army, Richmond was a gay and bustling city. Half the great families of the old south were represented there. And there for a time an attempt was made to carry on the stately and splendid social life which the war had ended forever. Big clubs were opened, and gambling and drinking, both fostered by the excitement and temptation of army life, so recently over, ran high. The mansions of the Richmond gentry were the scenes of nightly hospitality, and each week the fashionables drove in their coaches to a ball.

Gradually the young men who had gone home to their plantations from the war gave up the fight with nature, and one after the other gathered together the little remnant of their fortunes and came to Richmond to practice law or attempt to earn a living in some other way. Hundreds of young men, dependent on their own resources for the first time, and all of them of the highest social standing, added to the excitement and gayety of the Virginia capital.

Among the fashionable beaus of Richmond at the time was Captain Page McCarthy, then a man of 40 and a descendant of a famous Fairfax county family. His father had served several terms in congress and had met and killed his man according to the regulations of the code of honor. All over the south an appeal to the code had always been the first resort of an insulted gentleman, and now, since the four years of war had taught these defeated soldiers how cheap is human life, duels were more common than ever.

The belle of Richmond during this period of unrest and excitement was Mary Triplett. Half the young men in Richmond were in love with her and there was great rivalry among them all for the slightest favor from her hand. She was the nightly toast and at the weekly ball reigned supreme. One of the most fervent of her admirers was Captain Page McCarthy. Miss Mary, however, did not favor the captain, and finally a quarrel arose between them, as a result of which they passed each other on the street without speaking.

At one of the dancing parties it so happened that Mary Triplett was placed in the formation of some figure directly opposite Captain McCarthy. She could not refuse to dance with him without creating a scene, so she walked through the figure with great coolness and dignity, only so far recognizing the captain's existence as was necessary under the circumstances.

Already Captain McCarthy was angry, but this treatment made him furious. He left the ballroom a few minutes later. In the next issue of a Richmond paper there appeared a little poem of perhaps six stanzas, which set all Richmond in a fever of excitement. Four of the lines were as follows:

When Mary's queenly form I press
In Strauss' latest waltz,
I might as well her lips caress,
Although those lips be false.

The poem was entitled "To Mary," and, though everybody recognized the application of the lines and was morally certain that McCarthy had written them, nobody had any proof that he was the author.

Half of the beaus of Richmond started out to run down the man who had written and printed the cowardly lines, determined to call him to account on the field of honor. Among them was John Mordecai, a newcomer to Richmond and a young lawyer of great brilliancy and learning. Mordecai made it his business to visit all the clubs frequented by Captain McCarthy and in the presence of the fire eating captain and other club members to forcibly express his opinion of the "coward and cad, whoever he may be," who wrote the offensive lines.

Finally McCarthy turned to Mordecai, with whom he had been on intimate terms, and said, with a threatening manner, "I wrote those verses, Mr. Mordecal."

Mordecai bowed mockingly across the table.

"Your admission, Captain McCarthy, does not alter my opinion in the least."

Friends interfered before McCarthy succeeded in his attempt to strike Mordecai and forced him to leave the clubhouse. The same day Mordecai entered another club in which McCarthy was playing billiards. The latter commenced at once in a loud voice to comment on the fact that some people are unable to mind their own business, and Mordecai finally walked over to the table at which he was playing and asked if he meant to refer to him.

"Who are you, sir?" sneered McCarthy, staring Mordecai in the face.

In an instant Mordecai had seized a billiard cue, with which he struck McCarthy to the floor, saying as he did so, "I'll show you who I am!"

Of course a duel followed. The two men, with their seconds, met at daybreak next morning just outside the Oakwood cemetery, below the city. So deadly was the spirit which animated them that they fought with dueling pistols, heavily loaded, at ten paces. At the first shot both men missed. McCarthy demanded a second shot. This time the aim was better on both sides, and both men fell. McCarthy's right thigh was broken, and Mordecai was fatally wounded, with a bullet through his abdomen.

As Mordecai lay dying he raised himself on his elbow and whispered to his second, "Present my compliments to Captain McCarthy and tell him he can have another shot if he wishes."

Just as the second shots were fired the police arrived on the scene, too late to do more than arrest the seconds. Mordecai lived but six hours, but McCarthy finally recovered after spending months in terrible agony.

Mordecai's seconds were William M. Royall, now a leading lawyer of Richmond, and William R. Trigg, now a shipbuilder. Dr. Hunter McGuire, the personal physician of Stonewall Jackson, was one of the attending surgeons. The whole party was locked up in the Richmond jail, where they were confined for several weeks. During the period of their imprisonment the women of Richmond, who felt that Mordecai had fallen in defense of one of their number, paid them every attention. Fresh flowers and delicious dishes were brought each day to the cells of the prisoners, and on their release they were welcomed back with demonstrations of joy.

Captain McCarthy, after his recovery, became a recluse and a misanthrope. He lived most of the time in Richmond and was looked upon as a misanthrope, who avoided men and hated women. And the killing of young Mordecai went far toward breaking up the vogue of the duel in the south.

As for Miss Triplett, she married a Richmond lawyer and died suddenly at her home several years ago.—Chicago Tribune.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

A LONDON WOMAN WHO IS A FAMOUS DOG FANCIER.

"The Last Dying Protest"—The Deadly Long Skirt—Maidens Crossed In Love — Dainty Lounging Gowns. Women Expert Smugglers.

Mrs. Langdon of London and her precious dogs form one of the perennial topics of conversation which are constantly cropping up at afternoon teas and such social functions as provide an abundance of time for informal conversation.

Not that Mrs. Langdon's dogs are by any means unworthy topics for people to gossip about, for there is not a more perfect little kennel in all England than that to be found at Salter's Hall, Sudbury, that quaint old fifteenth century country house, which looks today exactly as it did when the Bard of Avon was paying court to sweet Anne Hathaway across in the shires.

A Press representative called upon the lady and was regaled with an introduction to the aristocratic little canine family, supplemented by an interesting chat about dogs by the charming hostess.

"Of course Miladi is the favorite. Isn't she a dear little pet?" asked Mrs. Langdon, with one of her winning smiles.

No one could deny the assertion. The little basset hound is undoubtedly a dream. Its aristocratic look of disdain showed that Miladi was above being patronized by a mere foreigner.

Holgate Nip, who boasts such distinguished ancestry as Ch. Stipendiary, is the next in succession to Mrs. Langdon's heart. She is a little fox terrier and has carried off more prizes than can be easily remembered offhand. Her white face, fringed with gray black ears and cheeks, is alert with almost human intelligence, and it is only the voice of her mistress which prevents her from taking an impromptu meal from the caller's leg.

As for the dachshunds, they are, to my thinking, the pink of the collection, with their placid, faithful faces and sensible repose so appropriate to marble or walnut halls, oak panelings and Jacobin carvings.

MRS. LANGDON AND HER DOGS.

As they sit posing for my camera, mistress and dog, I doubt if I ever had a more charming subject in my life.

The dogs look curiously at the apparatus as if even their well bred languor could permit of a little passing curiosity, and so now we have them all, a charming bunch, Royal Duchess and Holgate Jacobite, the two dachshunds foremost in the group.

Then we stroll out to the kennels to look at the less distinguished canines, many of whom are, notwithstanding, dogs of high degree and necessarily pedigree.

But the chat of the hostess interests me more than do the dogs, and I listen as she pleasantly ripples off some answers to my questions about dogs.

"What do I think is the greatest virtue that a dog can possess? Why, faithfulness, of course. And aren't good dogs faithful creatures? How immensely more so than our human friends!

"Politeness? Yes, I like polite dogs. None other ought to be permitted among civilized people. I think dogs gather much of their habits from their surroundings and, of course, from their training.

"Yes, I am coming to America in the autumn, according to present arrangements, but do not know exactly how many of the dogs I shall take along to exhibit beyond the ones you have just photographed."—Philadelphia Press.

'Twas Only a Dream.

A newspaper reporter dreamed one night that the editor had decided to get out a paper that was entirely satisfactory. Every item that was brought in was carried around to different houses, and if any objections were raised it was "killed." At 3 p. m. the paper went to press as usual, and when the patrons unfolded it that evening they found nothing but a blank sheet. The editor of the paper slept sweetly that night, realizing that he had printed nothing to offend anybody and that his paper was entirely satisfactory. Thus speaketh the editor of the Warren Mirror.

Rheumatism

Rheumatic pains are the cries of protest and distress from tortured muscles, aching joints and excited nerves. The blood has been poisoned by the accumulation of waste matter in the system, and can no longer supply the pure and health sustaining food they require. The whole system feels the effect of this acid poison; and not until the blood has been purified and brought back to a healthy condition will the aches and pains cease.

Mrs. James Kell, of 707 Ninth street, N. E., Washington, D. C., writes as follows: "A few months ago I had an attack of Sciatic Rheumatism in its worst form. The pain was so intense that I became completely prostrated. The attack was an unusually severe one, and my condition was regarded as being very dangerous. I was attended by one of the most able doctors in Washington, who is also a member of the faculty of a leading medical college here. He told me to continue his prescriptions and I would get well. After having it filled twelve times without receiving the slightest benefit, I declined to continue his treatment any longer. Having heard of S. S. S. (Swift's Specific) recommended for Rheumatism, I decided, almost in despair however, to give the medicine a trial, and after I had taken a few bottles I was able to hobble around on crutches, and very soon thereafter had no use for them at all, S. S. S. having cured me sound and well. All the distressing pains have left me, my appetite has returned, and I am happy to be again restored to perfect health.

SSS the great vegetable purifier and tonic, is the ideal remedy in all rheumatic troubles. There are no opiates or minerals in it to disturb the digestion and lead to ruinous habits.

We have prepared a special book on Rheumatism which every sufferer from this painful disease should read. It is the most complete and interesting book of the kind in existence. It will be sent free to any one desiring it. Write our physicians fully and freely about your case. We make no charge for medical advice.

A NIGHT OF TERROR.

"Awful anxiety was felt for the widow of the brave General Burnham of Machias, Me., when the doctors said she could not live till morning" writes Mrs. S. H. Lincoln, who attended her that fearful night. "All thought that she must soon die from pneumonia, but she begged for Dr. Kings New Discovery, saying that it had more than once saved her life, and had cured her of consumption. After three doses she slept easily all night, and its further use completely cured her." This marvelous medicine is guaranteed to cure all throat, chest and lung diseases. Only 50c. and $1.00. THE WEATHER.

For North Carolina: Fair tonight; Saturday partly cloudy; probably showers in south and west portions; fresh northeast winds.

Highest temperature for Greensboro for the past twenty-four hours ending eight o'clock this morning 92, lowest 65.

A MIXTURE.

A Few Items Gathered Under the Rays of the September Sun.

The spring session of the Orange Presbytery will be held in Graham.

Prof. S. H. Hodgin, a member of the faculty of Guilford College, is sick. It is feared that he has fever.

Mr. and Mr. W. T. Williams have taken rooms and will board at Mrs. J. M. Sikes', on East Washington street.

Mr. A. G. Connelly has added a paint shop to his repair establishment on Davie street, near the market house.

An extra car was attached to the Raleigh train at noon to accommodate the crowds returning from Asheville and other resorts in the western part of the State.

Parties coming in on the Madison train this afternoon say that a hundred men are searching for a negro who criminally assaulted a white woman in Madison last night.

It is reported that Mr. John D. Pannill, a prominent attorney of Reidsville, will move his family to Greensboro, being attracted here partly by the excellent school advantages.

The remains of the late Mr. Thomas Ruffin were carried through here today to his former home in Hillsboro, where they will be interred. Mr. Ruffin was killed by an explosion at Montgomery, Ala., a few days ago.

Wharton Brothers have a very neat puzzle which they are giving away to the children who purchase school books of them. It is quite an engenious contrivance, consisting of two marbles and a round stick enclosed in a little glass-covered round box.

Charlotte News: Rev. A. A. Little, of Steele Creek church, returned this morning from Greensboro, where he had been holding a ten-days' meeting. The attendance was good and numbers made professions of religion. Mr. Little will be in his own pulpit Sunday.

Thomas Wilder, a six-year-old white boy, was a passenger on the train from Winston yesterday evening. He was from Walnut Cove and was en route to the Thomasville Orphanage, traveling alone. A paper pinned on his breast told his name and destination.

A POPULAR ODD FELLOW.

Mr. N. Jacobi, One of the Oldest Members of the Order in the State, in Town Today.

Mr. Nathaniel Jacobi, of Wilmington, one of the most prominent Odd Fellows in the State, came down from Roaring Gap this morning, where he has been spending some time on a vacation. He left on the noon train for home.

While in the city this morning he was kept busy shaking hands with his brother Odd Fellows, with whom he is very popular. In North Carolina Odd Fellowship he and Mr. R. J. Jones, of Wilmington, are known as the two "Grand Old Men." It is Mr. Jacobi's proud boast that his is the only family in the State in which all the males are members and pastgrands of the order. His eldest son, Mr. Marcus W. Jacobi, is the present grand master of North Carolina.

The elder Mr. Jacobi has been a member of the board of trustees of the Orphans' Home, in Goldsboro, since its establishment, and claims, and justly so, to be the father of the institution.

The Divine Fake to Sue The Telegram.

The divine healer, or divine fake, held forth again last night and today on the corner of South Elm and West Washington streets. Last night he devoted a portion of his time to abuse of the daily papers of the city. From the drift of his remarks it was evident that he does not appreciate the care the papers took in exposing him.

It is stated that the healer, he of the long auburn tresses and pale face, will bring a damage suit against The Telegram for $25,000.

Miss Pearce Entertains.

Miss Fannie Pearce entertained quite a number of her young friends last night at her home on West Lee street. It was a very pleasant occasion and was much enjoyed by all.

A Greensboro Firm Gets a Good Contract.

McClamroch Brothers have been awarded the contract to furnish the material and put a tile floor in the main hall of the Deaf, Dumb and Blind Institution in Raleigh. Their foreman, Mr. Jerry Carew, went to Raleigh this morning to begin the work.

A New Peach Discovered

Several years ago Mrs. J. T. Scarborough planted a peach seed in her yard on McGhee street. A young sprout came up and grew into a well developed tree, which is now bearing most excellent fruit. The peaches are freestones, of a white flesh color, and ripen just about this time. They are large, well shaped and very luscious.

Mr. J. Van Lindley has examined the fruit and pronounces it of a most excellent quality and flavor.
